“EsSENSE:

Exploring and Measuring Sensory Experience”

Workshop Objectives

This is a one-day workshop on sensory marketing and the measurement of product and service experience through the sense, with the objectives of:

1. Learning the latest findings from neuroscience, psychology and sensory science and their implications for the evaluation of customer experience
2. Improving understanding of the individual role of the human senses and the ways in which they integrate to build holistic experiences
3. Providing frameworks and tools for researching innovation and sensory experience at all stages of the product lifecycle

Workshop Outline

Morning – The story of the human senses

- The reality of sensory perception and top-down experience
- Five senses and counting
- Visual perception and the illusion of seeing
- Color, culture and the meaning of experience
- Synaesthesia, metaphors and sensory integration

Afternoon – Measuring sensory experiences

- The innovation lifecycle
 - Using the right research at each stage of development
 - Exploring the senses with qualitative research
 - Measuring the senses with quantitative research
 - Branding and marketing to the human senses
- Each session will include a presentation of key principles, visual examples (including short video clips), group discussion and a range of practical exercises to apply learning to immediate business issues.

Facilitator

Neil Gains is the owner of Tapestry Works, and consults and trains on human and cultural psychology across Asia. He has 20 years marketing research experience at Cadbury Schweppes, AMI and Synovate, and most recently led Synovate's Asia Pacific product design and development practice working closely with key global accounts to support their innovation programs. He has lived in UK, Indonesia, China and Singapore and has a doctorate in Psychology and Sensory Science from Reading University.
